1. Initial Performance Evaluation:

During the first month of employment, the company will evaluate the employee's performance, discipline, and conduct. If found unsuitable, the company reserves the right to terminate employment without notice or compensation. The company will not be liable for any payment in such cases.

2. Probation Period:

The first six months of employment shall be considered as a probation period. During this time, either party may terminate the employment without serving notice or paying any severance.

3. Resignation and Full and Final Settlement (FnF):

Employees must provide a written resignation and serve the applicable notice period. Full and Final Settlement will be processed only after 45 working days from the last working day, subject to return of company property and proper handover.

4. Absconding or Sudden Exit:

If an employee leaves the company without prior notice or fails to serve the notice period, the company shall not be liable to make any payments including salary, incentives, or FnF. Legal action may also be initiated if necessary.

5. Company Policy Compliance:

All employees must follow company rules, HR policies, work ethics, and professional behavior at all times. Any violation may lead to disciplinary action, suspension, or termination.

6. Confidentiality Clause:

Employees must maintain strict confidentiality regarding company data, client information, processes, and internal communications. Breach of confidentiality will result in immediate termination and may attract legal action.

7. Working Hours and Attendance:

Employees are expected to maintain punctuality and regular attendance. Repeated late comings, absenteeism, or skipping shifts without approval will attract warnings, deductions, or termination.

8. Company Assets and Property:

All hardware, software, data, and documents issued by the company must be returned in good condition upon resignation or termination. Any damage or failure to return company property may lead to salary deductions or legal action.

9. Code of Conduct:

All employees must behave professionally and respectfully with colleagues, supervisors, and clients. Any form of misconduct, harassment, or inappropriate behavior will not be tolerated.

10. Amendments to Policy:

The company reserves the right to update or amend the terms and conditions or policies at any time based on organizational needs. Employees will be notified accordingly.
